

Grizzly Bears in British Columbia

Located 80kms north of Campbell River in British Columbia is a wild and remote area of the Pacific Northwest known as Knight Inlet. As the longest fjord on the B.C. coast, Knight Inlet offers visitors spectacular scenery and dramatic mountain peaks. Situated 60 kms from the mouth of Knight Inlet is a floating lodge of the same name. Tucked into Glendale Cove, Knight Inlet Lodge offers one of the few protected anchorages in the inlet.

During your stay you will be able to enjoy several activities which all centre on the area's fascinating wildlife. Bear viewing is the main attraction but, depending on the nature of your itinerary and how long you choose to stay, you can also expect to see a diverse range of birdlife and marine mammals, too.

This is a unique, untouched area of Canada and guests always depart with fabulous wildlife memories.

The lodge is open from mid May to mid October (closed 25 – 31 July) and the minimum stay is two nights, one in Campbell River and one at Knight Inlet, although we would recommend a stay of at least three nights in order to make the most of the activities.

Knight Inlet

The lodge dates back to the 1940s when the original float housed a logging camp. The lodge now provides 15 comfortable guest rooms which are cedar panelled and have private bathrooms; most of the buildings have lounges with wood burning stoves for relaxing in the evening.

Glendale Cove is home to one of the largest concentrations of grizzly (brown) bears in British Columbia. It is not uncommon for there to be up to 50 bears within 10 kilometres of the lodge in the peak season, when the salmon are returning to the river. Although they are abundant in the fall, it is not the only season that grizzly bears can be found in Glendale Cove. Beginning in late April the bears return to the estuary from winter dens and start feeding on sedges, succulents, grasses and barnacles that abound in the estuary. The spring growth provides the basic nutritional needs for the bears which draws them from the mountains to the estuary. This is the best time for viewing, as the tiny cubs emerge with their cautious mothers. In the summer, the berry crop is very heavy and this helps keep the bears in the general area. Although you will usually see some bears every day, you won't see the high numbers of the spring/late summer/fall viewing season.

How you view the bears will depend on the season. In the spring, you will set out in boats which enable you to get close to the shore (50 metres) and have a good view of the bears feeding. A safe distance is kept as to not disturb them. The early summer program continues on the water but if the opportunity arises there may be a chance to use the tree stands.

By late August guests will be moved to the platforms at the spawning channel although you can continue to use the tree and river stands. In all of the viewing situations, guest safety is of the utmost importance. The objective is to view the bears in their natural environment without having a negative impact on them.

There are also a number of other tours available. The marine wildlife tour is recommended and changes depending on the season. In the spring, travelling through the inlet you can expect to see seals, sea lions, porpoises, dolphins and the occasional minke whale. From July onwards, you have the added attraction of the orca (killer) whale – you can spend some great viewing time with these magnificent mammals. In September you can add the humpback whale to the list as they start to arrive from Alaska on their way to Hawaii. Viewings are infrequent, but when they do occur, they're spectacular!

There are also estuary tours, boat tours, excursions to the upper reaches of Knight Inlet and day trips to Thompson and Bond Sounds. Great photographic and viewing opportunities of birds, bears, and the stunning landscape can be experienced on all of the tours. For the active there are day-hiking tours and guided kayaking tours in the estuary that are also popular ways to view wildlife.
